EDITOR'S NOTE: After the publication of this story, Alabama coach Nick Saban released a statement: "The University of Alabama is aware of information suggesting that our football student-athletes are being served food in an on-campus dining facility by a third-party vendor that was not an approved vendor. The University is working with the vendor to ensure that this incident does not occur in the future." A video of Alabama football players last Friday having to be given a "mock" tray of food in a university dining hall received more than 200,000 views on Facebook in a matter of hours. The social media reaction included more than a few comments of outrage and frustration from fans and opposing coaches. The controversial video showed one Crimson Tide player, wearing an Alabama T-shirt, waiting at a dining table before he picked up a tray, which looked similar to one another. Another player, wearing a T-shirt with "Mark Ingram" on it, actually sat down at the table before picking up the tray. Units of food were also shown on the tray. "I was appalled when I first saw that," said Oklahoma State coach Mike Gundy. "I'm sure I'm not the only one. But I felt it was important to put it out there and say we're all on the same page, even though it's not our system that's involved." Gundy said he has an obligation to his players and coaches to let them know what he sees is wrong, and he doesn't think there is much more he can say to them. "I think you can put somebody's character
