CB1 and CB2 receptors are G-protein coupled receptors for the endocannabinoids. The receptors were originally discovered in rat brain and shown to mediate the effects of both anandamide and 2-arachidonyl-glycerol. Endocannabinoids, the principal endogenous ligands for the receptors, are arachidonate derivatives that are synthesized in the brain and act peripherally to stimulate neuromuscular transmission, food intake, and other biological actions. Recent data suggest that these effects are mediated in part by the endocannabinoids acting at their receptors in the brain. In the current studies, the protein levels and distribution of the receptors were characterized in specific brain regions and spinal cord. CB1 and CB2 protein levels in rat brain were determined by immunoblotting and densitometry analyses of Western blots. Receptor levels were highest in the limbic cortex, especially in the frontal cortex. Receptor levels were highest in brainstem regions, especially in the caudal spinal cord. In the spinal cord, CB1 levels were highest in the rostral lumbar cord and lowest in the sacral cord. CB2 levels were highest in the sacral cord. Expression levels for both receptors in brain and spinal cord were compared with selected histochemical markers for specific cell populations. The cannabinoid receptors were not detected in neurofibrillary tangles of the Alzheimer's disease brain nor in Nissl-stained neurons in Huntington's disease brain. What's New in the Similar Data Finder For Excel?

- Searching for misspelled words in Excel worksheets can be eye exhausting, as you might easily lose sight of cells or skip a few of them. It is easier to use an application that can find similar words and pinpoint their cell location. Similar Data Finder for Excel is a nifty add-on that finds similar keywords and cell values in Excel spreadsheets. In order to be able to use the application you need, as its name says, Microsoft Excel and .Net Framework installed on your computer. Quick word finder The add-on utility searches for similarities between each cell value in a Excel worksheet, and then it displays the most relevant results found. You can select which search method will be used, as the application uses two different methods. The first method relies on percentages, meaning that you can specify the percentage of different characters from each string of words. The second method uses fixed numbers of different character values, giving you the option to specify how many different symbols can two or more words have in order to pass as similar. Furthermore, you can choose to ignore identical cells in search results. Fast word editor Once found, each similar keyword is displayed in a result window, along with some details, such as cell position or complete cell text. You can select to modify a cell, or mark it for further analysis. In addition, you can perform fast row and column deletions using the application. A powerful keyword identifier Similar Data Finder for Excel can help you correct your spreadsheets by finding similar cell entries with ease. This means you do not have to search for them manually, as the application does all the work for you. Similar Data Finder for Excel Supports Microsoft Office Excel 2003 and 2010 (32bit, 64bit) Installation To install the application, simply run the Setup.exe file, which you can find inside the ZIP file you will receive when you purchase the application. If you do not want to install the add-on directly, you can download the installer from Support.aspx and run it manually after unzipping the file. The installation process does not require any special knowledge, as you can easily follow the instructions of the application wizard and the entire process will be completed in few minutes. What's new in 4.30 1. Fixed minor bugs in the application's interface. 2. The add-on is now tested with Microsoft Office Excel 2007/2010 and 2010/2013 3. The search method used in the application was adjusted to display results faster. The add-on utility searches for similarities between each cell value in a Excel worksheet, and then it displays the most relevant results found. You can select which search method will be used, as the application uses two different methods. The first method relies on percentages, meaning that you can specify the percentage of different characters from each
