Studies carried out in the past project period supported by this grant have advanced knowledge on these mechanisms at multiple levels of physiology. First, we found that brain endothelial cells (BEC) are more than passive filters separating the central nervous system (CNS) from the vascular system. They actively maintain the CNS-specific microenvironment by secreting growth and inhibitory factors. Second, we have shown that cerebral astrocytes (CAS) are essential partners in angiogenesis, BBB formation and function. In contrast to a long held view that the 3da54e8ca3
