- This tool is designed to monitor your computer's CPU usage, memory usage, network throughput, as well as bandwidth usage. It will be a great tool for computer users to measure their computer's performance, monitor the performance of applications, or for network management. - The tool allows you to monitor any combination of these: CPU, Memory, File System, Network, Bandwidth. - The tool uses Microsoft's Win32 API to get the data, and shows the data in an Explorer-like style. - The data is shown in four different metrics: CPU usage, memory usage, bandwidth usage, and total throughput. - You can set the interval between graph updates. Updates can be from.02 seconds to one hour. - The first update is only when you first run the tool. - The speed of the graph update is configurable. - The title bar for the graph will show the last update, and last available time. - A clear icon on the taskbar will show the last update. - A new application window will be opened every time you make a change to your settings. - It's relatively easy to use. - Uses Microsoft's.NET Framework, so it should run on all

Windows versions. - The app is free. Install Perfgraph in One Click: - You will need to set up an account on our download page. - Then simply download Perfgraph. - It will open up the file properties dialog box, and the extension will be changed to zip. - Press any button to unzip the file. - Copy Perfgraph to your desktop, and open it. - It will run as an Explorer toolbar, as shown in the next image: - If you like the tool, please leave us a positive rating or review. 2019 Disclaimer: I am not affiliated with Microsoft in any way. I'm just a fan of C#. Saros, the algorithm that determines the length of day, month, and year for each day, used by the Windows Calendar application, always ran asynchronously. As a result, the Calendar application could only show the current date if it started running. The date could not
