WCF Architect is a WCF Dependency Project that includes two features: 1.It creates a WCF project with all of the data types and Service Contracts defined in a project. 2.It creates WCF projects that can host Web Services with ease.

What's New In?

WCF Architect uses a new approach in creating WCF web services. Instead of spending hours hand-typing boring WCF code and running batch scripts to handle your builds, WCF Architect allows you to enter in the basic information about your service and click a button. WCF Architect handles everything after that, it will generate the necessary code, compile it into an assembly, generate the client proxies, builds the client proxies, and outputs it all the folders you specify. Just one click. WCF Architect Dependency Projects are a unique capability that allow you to share WCF Data Types and Services between multiple WCF Projects. Using Dependency projects allows you to write one data type and use it in any project that is dependent on that project. This provides savings not only in code maintenance but allows advanced usage scenarios. For example, we use a Object Database for one our software packages, using Dependency projects allowed us to write one data type that the Database could understand and share that data type with multiple different services and programs. WCF Architect will also generate ServiceHosts and their accompanying bindings. These are completely optional and do not affect your Services, but they can be a real time-saver as WCF Architect will make sure that both the Server and Client bindings match perfectly, saving you from a host of deployment headaches. WCF Architect can even generate Data Contract classes that support WPF Dependency Objects. When we started using WCF Architect internally we discovered that a task that previously took eight hours, now took only two. Instead of worrying about getting our services code just right before we wrote any useful code, we were able to build working code in days. If we needed to make a small change to our services, WCF Architect could handle it in a seamless fashion. We even found that we were able to write code first and WCF Architect could seamlessly integrate with our existing code. News The one thing that connects all my work, projects and life together is the love I have for art, history, culture and making unique content for all of you. My site is updated daily with new content and is one of the most complete travel, culture and interesting lifestyle sites online. Car travel is usually more pleasurable than train travel, but I don't want you to feel that way forever. If you are unfamiliar with the basics of train travel, it's like driving in traffic. The train may seem nice at first, but you'll eventually get frustrated and annoyed when your day is jam packed with gridlock. There is no better or safer way to go from San Francisco to Las Vegas, Texas, Chicago, or pretty much any other place in the U.S. than by train. But if you need to travel through the Rockies to get to Colorado Springs, the easiest way to get there is by train. So
