What's new:

? We remember the 11th of June 1942. Or so we thought. Of course, we were not aware of the fact that May 15th 1942, marked the day when Nazi Germany surrendered in the Second World War, but still, Junes never got far apart. The period between June 4th and June 12th 1942 is something that remains primarily in our memories. And few things have remained as long and as vivid as the battleship Tiger of the 113. After all, it was this manly ship that was the first to be dedicated to defence of the Reich against the Allies. And for that we owe him our gratitude. However, when looking through shipping histories and trade journals we suddenly discovered another ship with identical characteristics, the tank TANK0159. It was the variant of the TANK 0032 already discussed earlier. This time though, there is very little information about this ship. It had been set up in Deutschland GmbH, a German organisation that was prepared to build ships. However, there is no exact date. Note that the TANK 0159 should also be found on ship designation lists for battleships and heavy cruisers as Tiger. That leads us to believe that the TANK 0159 is very probably TANK 0194. Since this is still in German hands, we'll confirm this later. The ship has nothing of the Tiger so far, so we might have to wait for later battleship upgrades before something is known. The TANK 0159 is almost identical with the TANK 0194. There are some minor differences, however. The latter ship has a displacement of 61,500 tons and a length of 435.4 meters. However, this ship is of 175,735 tons and length of 487.0 meters. Instead of the 166 mm main battery used by Tiger, this ship has a 152 mm main battery. This sounds significant, but the differences are more in line with what is used in practice. With her lower speed of, and her better protection, in the early 40s, this ship's guns are hardly a compromise. There are numerous publications that claim that the respective technical data measures from the TANK 0194 is just as much as a compromise for Tiger. One of the first publications on this ship was in the DEALAG Trade Journal. In 1945, in which the German DEALAG editions were published, an article titled “Deutschlands neuer Tankhafenkreu
