When you think of the first time meeting your former romantic interest, you probably remember the butterflies in your stomach, the conversations you had that made you feel giddy, the butterflies in your stomach, and the conversations you had that made you feel giddy. Thankfully, you also probably remember the first time you ate a slice of that pie you've been working so hard to lose weight for. Remembering that first kiss with your ex can be so sweet. And, sometimes, just so necessary. In January, my ex and I had been on and off in our dating relationship for over a year. Since I had a habit of breaking our on-again/off-again status up with weeks of turning on my dating apps, it was getting to the point where I was in a state of denial about the breakup. I knew he didn't love me, but I also knew we'd still be getting pizza from each other if we got back together. The first day of a relationship is more like the preview version of your favorite TV show, where you can see everything and nothing at the same time. I had the best idea of what happened during my first relationships, but I had no idea how it felt to be on the other side of that treatment. I wasn't yet in the state of blissful denial as I had been in the past. I felt like I was forced to be in this constant state of being on my guard. The butterflies, the butterflies, the
