Ghoul Island is a two-part campaign adventure for the investigative-fantasy roleplaying game, Call of Cthulhu Fifth Edition, which first released in 2011. Based on a piece of land in southeast Florida, and named after the Indian word for “womb,” Ghoul Island is notable as being the “first Cthulhu Mythos location to be home to multiple investigators.” With two-part adventure Path 1: Mutiny and Path 2: Farzeen, the game presents the investigators with a mystery centered around a mystery ship, one that is revealed to have been fleeing the Old Ones from the otherworldly island of Cotopaxi. Situated in the Caribbean Sea, the island of Ghoul Island is isolated from the outside world and has a thriving and prosperous community (the largest of its kind). The faraway island seemed like a safe haven until it came to light that pirates from other parts of the world were hiding out in the island’s secret tunnels. These pirates began attacking ships and plundering the island. The investigators must venture out on the seas in search of this mystery ship and discover where the pirates are hiding. Meanwhile, a cult has gained control of the abandoned tunnels and now has begun worshipping a horror they call Farzeen. The investigators must locate and stop this cult and uncover the secrets of Farzeen and the terrible thing that lies at its heart. And this is not your usual Cthulhu Mythos mystery! Some members of the investigators have been abducted by the cult, and one has already had her head chopped off and replaced by that of Farzeen! The investigators are only helped by missing persons signs and their own wits and abilities; a lighthouse and a sailors’ chapel are their only clues. This first campaign adventure in Sandy Petersen’s Cthulhu Mythos presents you with a mystery that revolves around a mysterious island, a mystery ship, and a mysterious cult. It begins with the Great Hunt of the Cthulhu Mythos investigators as they gather together at the investigators’

On the way, they stumble across a shipwreck in the coral seas. JAXA/NHK (Japan) Lifeslide Soundtrack: Episode 3 Episode 4375 / 00:12:19 / 2137 hits All the Mission Crew updates ↑ Illustrated by Imprint Studio. Let's visit Mars together! See you there! Missions JAXA's MAKECOM team is on the move today, September 18, to Monogatari-ISS! It's our third time in a row you're tuned in to MAKECOM's fun relay missions—the first two times in July. Though we couldn't watch the entire event, the crew weren't idle while waiting for JAXA's strength and courage to cross the seas to reach us. Rocket Parts! Within the crates of resource material orders sent from the Earth, duplicate parts of hardware, like rocket propellants, and even a laser can be seen (unseen). It can be said that the resources being used by the crew are enough to conduct three sounding rockets a month, so it was like they were preparing for an additional one. Science Material! If you're familiar with the MAKECOM mission, you know that the MAKECOM team carries detection equipment, fuel material, and other resources outside of the Space Utilization Module (SUM). True to MAKECOM's motto of "carrying the world," there was also a copy of a magnetic wave measuring sensor, which was checked and verified on the launchpad. It's said to be an extremely sensitive instrument—much more so than the current scientific equipment to be used on the MAKECOM-1 ship. Similar to other teams, there is also a DEXIS (Diffuse X-ray Imaging Spectrometer) self-contained substance, which will be used on the MAKECOM-2 mission. For the first time since its launch, MAKECOM's detection equipment is also to be tested by the crew. We hope you've been watching, or listening to our reports on how the next mission of MAKECOM's recent key to success, youkai dokuritsu o miteiru, "the sacred mission to Mars," is going! We can't express how well the
