A conventional automobile windshield is usually designed to be as transparent as possible, yet not to be disposed too close to the driver or the passenger. The driver or passenger can easily see forward, rearward, and sideways. However, the driver's or passenger's vision within the inner or rear areas of the vehicle is limited by the existing automobile windshield and a conventional back side window. Thus, the area in which the driver or passenger is able to view is also limited, and the driver or passenger's vision within the vehicle is not reliable. In light of the above, it will be apparent to those skilled in the art from this disclosure that there exists a need for an improved vehicular rear view mirror. This invention addresses this need in the art as well as other needs, which will become apparent to those skilled in the art from this disclosure. saying that anything that you have done is a crime? `Ã` `Ã` A: You're trying to use the Windows start button as a shell for a command, and it doesn't understand that. Try the Linux instead, or if on Windows, right-click your desktop and add a shortcut to your favourite shell command. The problem is that the Windows start menu isn't seen by the windows shell as the start of a program. In the win32 world, using start is similar to using `./start` in a Linux shell, it launches your default shell, and for the windows shell that will be `cmd.exe`. From the prompt `cmd.exe` then launches the named program, your Windows command interpreter. If you find it silly, then you can use `tasklist` to see the program names of running commands. With a shell you can also run it and specify the path to a program, like `"C:\mydir\myprogram.exe"` or `"C:\mydir\anotherprogram"` and it will work too. Starting a program via a shell is different than starting it directly via the Windows interface. Side note: by default the start menu opens the command prompt so you can start programs and run interactive programs (like the calculator). You can view the command prompt if you want, via `cmd /k` or via the shell by typing `cmd /C`. Q: how to set the height and width of dropdown menu based on the content in it So I am developing a website which is responsive, which means the width and height may
