Gojek, which has been offering local food delivery service in Jakarta for a while, is now in the process of fundraising to start its own car-hailing service in Singapore. The service will only be available in the ITZ, Sentosa and Marina Bay Sands casinos, as well as Sentosa. With the funding secured, Gojek will in April begin offering taxis and services like driver insurance and fare tracking. Uber, which will launch its Singapore operations in April, has an online system where drivers will be able to pick up passengers. When Gojek users book a taxi, they will be redirected to the Gojek website for payment. The service will be similar to those by other international players like Uber. Gojek CEO Nadiem Maktoom said the company was keen to offer consumers what was missing in the local car-hailing market. "In Singapore, there isn't a car-hailing solution that offers the convenience of a smartphone and a user's mobility at the same time," he told Singapore Business Times. "So with Gojek, we want to bring people together, creating a fun, exciting and interactive mobile experience. "We are starting with taxis, but we'll be expanding to other platforms in the future." Mr Maktoom declined to comment on the funding and when the service would be launched in Singapore. At the moment, Gojek has over 20,000 drivers in Jakarta. The company currently has drivers in Singapore and the company wants to expand to 40,000 drivers in seven years. They currently have a loyalty programme and offer rewards to drivers. "The platform in Jakarta was created in late 2010. The first cars were brought in early 2011," Mr Maktoom said. About Me I'm a Singapore based business writer and get paid to put my opinion out there.

The film follows author and human rights activist James Leibold, as he travels the country in an attempt to "make peace" with Burmese refugees. Synopsis After accidentally witnessing the massacre of almost 100 Muslim Rohingyas by the military, Burmese author and human rights activist James Leibold travels to Rangoon where he discovers that the number of refugees there is only five thousand, and none have taken refuge in his hometown. He travels to Burma's border towns where the killings are also occurring, and learns how they are only beginning. He also attempts to find survivors, though eventually reveals that, as a Burmese national, he can no longer use Burmese media. To get around this obstacle, he interviews surviving villagers and friends. Upon his arrival in Cambodia, Leibold discovers that refugees are still crossing the border illegally in the dead of night. Though Leibold does not share his own political views, he recognizes the political situation as one of impending ethnic cleansing. With the possibility of the world's worst humanitarian crisis occurring, Leibold uses his gifts of persuasion and empathy in order to find a political solution to the crisis. Awards and screenings Burmese: Freedom in the Starry Sky was selected as the opening film of the USA Film Festival in October
