In subjects with subclinical hypothyroidism, the hypotensive response to oral thyroxine in normal subjects is accompanied by an increase in heart rate and reduced alpha-adrenergic and beta-adrenergic receptor responsiveness. We have recently demonstrated that in the conscious dog, hypothyroidism is associated with an increase in baseline heart rate and a diminution in the constrictor response to norepinephrine; however, the effects of hypothyroidism on the heart rate and peripheral vascular bed have not been clearly defined in the human. The effects of hypothyroidism on the responses to nitroglycerin and sympathetic nerve stimulation have not been previously evaluated in human subjects. In seven subjects with subclinical hypothyroidism and seven age-matched controls, arterial pressure, ECG and respiratory rate responses to sympathetic nerve stimulation (at both supine

Arterial smooth muscle can be stimulated to produce catecholamines by endogenous catecholamines, exogenous isoproterenol, and various drugs. To determine the significance of adenylyl cyclase activity in the regulation of arterial smooth muscle, the activity of adenylyl cyclase in strips of aorta was determined by incubating preparations with [α - 32 P]ATP in the presence and absence of drugs known to inhibit adenylyl cyclase and by measuring the formation of cAMP. The results of these studies show that the maximum rate of cAMP accumulation in aortic smooth muscle is 8.5 pmol/mg wet weight per minute in the presence of isoproterenol, and the EC₅₀ for forskolin is 2.7×10^{-6} M. Sodium nitroprusside at concentrations of 10^{-4} M and higher had no significant effect on cAMP accumulation, nor did vasopressin (10^{-8} M). GTP increased cAMP accumulation, but at concentrations of 10^{-3} M and higher. NaF or TMB-8 (10^{-4} M) had no effect on cAMP formation. Rolipram (10^{-5} M), theophylline (10^{-4} M), and imidazole (10^{-4} M) decreased cAMP accumulation. 8-bromo-cAMP at concentrations of 10^{-3} M and higher inhibited cAMP formation. Catecholamines (1-100 μ M) stimulated cAMP accumulation, but epinephrine (100 μ M) was without effect. After incubation of aortic strips with [α - 32 P]ATP in the presence of 1
