In late January 2016, a little over a year after President Obama signed an executive order to make America the first country to commit to the goal of a zero net emissions future by 2050, President Elect Donald Trump began holding meetings with representatives of the fossil fuel industry and other electric utility companies with a decidedly different position on climate change. It's a position that often puts coal, oil and gas companies at the front of the line for access to the administration and other federal agencies on issues that directly affect their bottom line. But Trump may not be able to get everything that the fossil fuel industry, and the utilities that rely on them, want. In fact, in a wide ranging interview with E&E News, the head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) Lisa Jackson, tells E&E News she and her agency are not interested in subsidizing coal. And, she notes that a big chunk of what the U.S. is paying to meet the federal climate agreement really goes to Canadian producers. Jackson, who was named the head of the EPA by President Obama in 2009, said she'd get in line at the grocery store with coal. She added that she's not interested in subsidies for the fossil fuel industry to get any dirtier. "The policy team at the EPA has been clear that we are going to be holding those accountable that are in compliance with the law,” she said. It’s a position the administration is taking as gas and coal production come under threat from the president’s insistence that coal be the future, most notably in his speech to the opening of the 2016 U.S. Conference of Mayors in March. “We’re going to put our

War And Peace in 1952 It was in the late 1940s that the biggest war in history was raging. A great Soviet-American war was tearing across Europe. Two more major wars were being fought within China. China was in desperate need of modern technology to match its own growing strength. The only hope lay in the United States. After winning the war for China, America sent Stalin everything he needed. After that, it then turned its attention to its traditional enemy, Japan. The result was a war for America's survival as Japan occupied China, parts of Indochina, and Southeast Asia. With the Japanese army cut in two, the US lost its status as the undisputed "world power". Before the Cold War, an alliance between the two nations had been commonplace. Now there were only two major powers left. After suffering a humiliating defeat, the US government decided to do something they had not done since the War of Independence. They again put their hopes in their people, and wanted them to be the heroes of the war. By the start of the Korean War in 1950, the US had won the victory over Japan and was able to turn its attention back to the Soviet Union. From there on out, the Cold War would rage. America was once again becoming a world power. China was humiliated by Stalin, and the prospect of a much larger war was once again lost. The beginning of the Chinese Civil War, which took place just after World War II, paved the way for communism in China. Russia supported Mao Zedong in that war, and later became China's ally during the Korean War. For America, it wasn't long before they were involved in Vietnam and the Cold War. The USSR was also in it, with Cuba and the North Vietnamese supporting the Vietnam People's Army (VPA) against the U.S. The next war that broke out was the border conflict between China and India, which lasted between 1962 and 1964. The People's Liberation Army's (PLA) numerical superiority in this war helped it to be the winner, but the main objective was not complete victory. The United States had always shown great support towards China since the Opium Wars, and China felt they had a good relationship with the U.S. However, the Communist Party of the U.S.A. and a

From what I can tell, it is not in the shipped version of the MVC library (1.0) to use with ASP.NET MVC. Is there any advantage of using the template cache or would it be safe to disable it? A: The template cache will free up memory each time a page is rendered for the first time. If you are running an MVC site with a small number of large pages that need to be cached then the template cache can have a huge benefit over a full blown ASP.NET caching system. The downside is that, as mentioned in the comments, this feature is very new and Microsoft's official recommendation is not to use it unless you are 100% sure of the expected usage pattern. While it shouldn't cause any problems in the majority of cases, it is better not to depend on the template caching feature if you are unsure of what is going to be cached.

Boris Johnson faces a growing revolt after promising a US-style anti-tobacco propaganda blitz on behalf of big business. The Prime Minister today pledged a new £100million scheme to hit Britain with more than 1,000 billboards across the UK - seen as a fiendishly clever way to market PPS's £3billion "non-sugary" ranges. Downing Street has confirmed that Mr Johnson will meet the bosses of major UK companies to discuss together "the urgent need for the introduction of plain packaging for tobacco products". The PM will unveil his new anti-tobacco campaign to pro-smoking elements in the UK at the launch of a series of advertisements set to go on air tonight at 9pm. He will announce the high-profile industry meeting in Downing Street that comes just five days before PPS, which produces the hugely successful Vapour range of cigarettes, rolls out an all-new £3bn kids' range cannibalising Philip Morris sales.

Ultra-Sensitivity Simultaneous Index Spectrometry Using a UV-Vis Trifunctional Doped Large Area Network Sensor Fabricated via Large-Scale and High-Yield Moisture-Enabled Liquid Processing. Ultra-high-sensitivity, small band, low-wavelength absorption (UV-vis) spectrometry in indoor environments has not been extensively studied despite its superior sensing capability. In this work, a large-scale and high-yield UV-vis simultaneous index spectrometry platform is fabricated via sol-gel chemistry. The reference index spectrometry basecoat is made of a porous polymer (alumina) that connects individual layers of strontium, silicon, and aluminum metal oxide (Mox) nanoparticles through a chemical reaction. The reflectance spectra of transparent mask systems made of silicon, aluminum, magnesium, and zinc oxides are calibrated to determine the evaporation-correction coefficients that take into account the refractive index changes in the multilayer nanohybrids. The refractive index sensitivity of the index spectrometry basecoat is confirmed to be 9 times higher than that of white paint. The ultralight index
