Introduction No matter how great the software you use to edit images, it's likely that your PC has at some point crashed — you may be using too many programs at once or maybe you deleted files accidentally. This means your pictures are gone, and without them, your images will never quite look the same. With the lost photo data to worry about, you need to be vigilant. The best way to ensure you're storing your photos safely is to use a photo file backup application. Since you are losing your photos — and you may need to edit them before you can use them again — you should create a backup from each photo file you edit. That way, if something goes wrong, your photos are safe. One of the most important things to remember is to always make backups. Backup data regularly to a removable media, such as a USB thumb drive, an SD card, a laptop drive, or a network storage device, so that you can restore it if something goes wrong. Backup files regularly, especially as you move around folders and files, and store your backups in a place where the space is not as tight.

This software tutorial will guide you through three methods: a complete manual process of data restoration, a manual process of recovery to an image file, and the use of professional-level photo recovery software from Data Rescue. Data Rescue Software Suite Data Rescue is a data recovery software package. It is designed to restore lost, deleted, or formatted data from any removable hard drive. Data Rescue may be able to recover other types of media such as the hard disk drive in your computer, floppy disk drive, optical drive, memory card, USB or another flash drive. The Data Rescue software is useful when you want to recover lost or damaged data from a hard drive, flash drive, memory card, thumb drive, and other removable media. It will allow you to copy the data back to the original destination if you don't have access to the original file, and it may be able to repair damaged or corrupted files. The Data Rescue software has two editions — Standard and Pro. The Standard version is free and it includes a limited amount of data recovery functions. With the Pro version, you'll get a useful tool that can recover data from damaged disks. Both editions of Data Rescue come with 15 days of free trial. If you want to learn more about Data Rescue, head over to their website. There you' 05a79cecff

Q: How to debug and alter the Bootstrap 4 column system? So I am trying to find a way to alter the bootstrap 4 column system so that it has a custom number of rows per section, in my particular case, my data can only take a whole row of 60 per section. I can't seem to find a way to do this at all in the documentation and I can't find a way to alter this directly in the source. I would need some help or a pointer in the right direction to get this done. My question is, is there a way I can customize the number of rows per section for each col in a given row, and if so how?

A: I was able to accomplish what I needed, though the main solution I've found is to use this rule for the main column `.col-sm-9 { width: 8.33%; }` This way I can get a large 8.33% wide column, and then I can use other code to put a small 60px wide row between every 6th and 7th of that column.

Q: Passing optional parameters to a component that needs parent binding

Given a component like this: I want to create a component that works like so:

Since the component instance is not bound to the form, I need to be able to pass an optional argument to the component constructor. My first attempt

(as described in SO: Passing optional param to component) is:

angular.module('components')

```
.component('avatar', { templateUrl: "url",

```
controller: [ '$log', function ($log) {

```
this.$log = $log; this.price =

this.parent.config.price?
```

this.parent.config.price : "free"; }] }); A

plain {{price}} in the template doesn't work.

If I write it as `{{config.price}}` then it does. I am doing this because I am trying to conditionally show a message with an image (which is wrapped in

What's New In?

French police moved in on Saturday to dismantle a firework factory that is thought to be the largest in Europe, and which allegedly has links to a jihadist network inside Syria. France24.com reports that scores of men and women and a significant number of schoolchildren are thought to have been turned away when anti-riot police stormed the factory on Friday. Police reports said the factory produces firecrackers and explosives and sells them to Syrians in France. (There was no word on whether the police also busted one of the largest sports-supply stores in France.) The firework factory, known as SAM (Système Amplifiant Mathématiques), is in the suburbs of Paris. Last year, the French parliament – responding to the bombing in the Paris Metro tunnels in which scores of people, mostly young people, were killed – ordered the deportation of all Syrian refugees after they had received France residency. A social affairs ministry report of last year shows that of about 4,800 people expelled over that summer, fewer than 200 had gone back. The report also said that about one in three expelled people was found to be a jihadist. And the problem hasn't gone away: a November 20 report by CNDS police, which tracks jihadists, said that between two-thirds and three-quarters of all the jihadists sent to prison since the start of the conflict in Syria were released because of amnesty laws – or because they were not charged. Citing security sources, the news agency said that the factory in Viry-Chatillon is the largest in Europe and has links to a jihadist network inside Syria. Francois Molins, the Paris prosecutor, told reporters at a news conference: “This is a major crime scene.” He didn’t give the exact location. “We want to restore the detonations and the explosives that were stored at the premises,” said a source at the scene. The aim is to bring the factory owners and the security services to justice. The suspect is thought to be one of two brothers, Mahmoud and Nabil B. At least 10 Syrians have been arrested in the region; one of them is thought to be a member of the jihadist grouping linked to al-Qaeda. The arrest and the confiscation of the factory has reopened the debate in France over Syria. Commenting to France 24, a French firefighter, Philippe Lejade, said: “I’m
