Alternatives Download alternative antimalware software here: I learned the hard way. Jorland: I learned the hard way. Well, you know that like so many of us, I've worked in newspapers and media for over 30 years.

I've been fired from newspapers and media outlets a bunch, so I've had the opportunity to learn how things could be done, and then how they can be done poorly. I've learned -- and I say this when I'm working with people in media -- the worst career road for a journalist is journalism. I just think because people are so impatient, they want things to happen immediately. They don't want to deal with the fact that it's a process. Sara Gilbert: Oh, yeah, there's no process. If the fucking war ends, we're done. "One morning I'm going to say, 'You know what, I'd like to have a page for cooking recipes that has things that people need to know to make as a life. You know, things like, 'I need to stock my pantry.' I need to stock my pantry. Or I need to stock my kitchen. It's like, what do I need to do to be self-sufficient?" -- Jorland We are currently experiencing technical difficulties to access your email. Q: Hiding div when checkbox is checked I am trying to get the div to be hidden when the checkbox is selected. Here is my fiddle. The div should be hidden when the checkbox is selected, but it is hidden even when the checkbox is unchecked. Thanks!
A: use prop: true on checkbox element to use the style of the checkbox checkbox element when unchecked. DEMO
`$(document).ready(function () { $('input[type=checkbox]').change(function(){ if($(this).is(":checked")){ $("#box").hide(); }else{ $("#box").show(); } }); });` Note : Instead of `!isset(this.checked)` you can use `$(this).prop("checked")!= true` if you are using older version of jquery.
