Set during the final days of World War II, Codename: Panzers Phase Two challenges players to direct the war on the Eastern Front. In addition to the classic invasion of Russia, players will lead armies into new theaters of conflict, such as an assault of the Adriatic Coast of Yugoslavia. No matter the mission, the battlefields will shift as weather and terrain change through the seasons of 1944. More important than resources or manpower, mobility will become the major key to victory as each side battles to control vital bridges and other strategic areas. Instead of the usual direct engagements, players will find that innovative use of terrain is key to success. The differences of Axis and Allied tactics will become more evident as the game progresses and the changing conditions favor the stronger side. The final installment of the Codename: Panzers series is designed to continue the legacy of the original Codename: Panzers and its revised Codename: Panzers Allied Assault. Deathwave will launch on XBLA, PSN, PC, Mac and Linux for $9.99. The game has been developed by a team led by the people of B4W, and they are calling Deathwave an "old-school next-gen" shooter, meaning the game is aiming to offer classic old school FPS gameplay using the capabilities of next-gen gaming. The team of developers, B4W Entertainment, is currently working on Deathwave and they are currently preparing the game for public release, so keep in mind this is mostly a pre-release blog, where I will inform you about the key elements of the game and we will show some of the levels. Currently, Deathwave is in Alpha, and after a short public demo next month, the full game will launch in 3/4 of 2014. The game isn't yet finished, the team is currently working on completing the things they still need, but in the meantime, I will share with you a few things about the game, in order to give you a better idea about what we have so far. The current planned release date for Deathwave is 27 June 2014 for PC, Mac, PSN and XBLA. As I said before, we still have a lot of improvements to make, the game is still in Alpha, the game is incomplete, it's not actually even ready to play. We will probably add several new enemies, items and spells, most of the enemies have already been designed, and the rest will be designed in the next few months. To add to that, the sound effects and music won't be included in the game because we are still fine-tuning, and we want to get the music right before putting them in the game. Most of the sound effects are already done, we just need to fine-tune them and adjust them before we put them in the game. Regarding the guns, currently I can show you the base pistol and the laser pistol, the other guns are in the pipeline and we will add them as soon as we have the time to do it, so expect some interesting and new guns in the game. The game has three classes of weapons: laser weapons, the shotguns, and the pistols. Your go-to weapons will depend on the enemy you are trying to kill. Remember that, you can't bring weapons with you in the game, so you will have to select what weapon is best for the enemy

We are wanting to bring the entire experience to the highest version possible We don't like to build truck simulators because they become a clone of their predecessor. That's why we have started on a completely new track with Train Simulator: VR Career. The Community has very clearly stated that anything small that keeps them from playing the game or making the game experience as bad as possible is the focus for us. Our first big push with this Version was to give the community more content.
