1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to an antenna and, more particularly, to an antenna having at least two antenna elements. 2. Description of the Related Art FIG. 1 shows a block diagram of a conventional antenna 102 including a front-end module 104, a main beam feeder 106, and a wide-beam feeder 108. The front-end module 104 includes an antenna element 110, a low noise amplifier (LNA) 112, and a mixer 114. The main beam feeder 106 is used to transmit a main beam 116. The wide-beam feeder 108 is used to transmit an imaging or tracking beam 118. Generally, the front-end module 104 includes the antenna element 110, the LNA 112, the mixer 114, and the main beam feeder 106. In this manner, the mixer 114 is used to perform a cross-beam coupling operation between the main beam feeder 106 and the wide-beam feeder 108. In the conventional antenna 102, when the main beam feeder 106 and the wide-beam feeder 108 are used as an antenna having only two elements, the matching for the front-end module 104 may be difficult. In addition, when the high-gain LNA 112 is used to perform a balancing operation for the front-end module 104, the sensitivity of the antenna may be degraded. FIG. 2 shows a schematic diagram of a conventional antenna 120 having a plurality of antenna elements. The antenna 120 further includes a first phase shifter 122, a second phase shifter 124, a wide-beam feeder 126, a main beam feeder 128, and a feeding circuit 130. The wide-beam feeder 126 and the main beam feeder 128 are used to transmit the imaging beam and the tracking beam, respectively. The feeding circuit 130 is used to feed the antenna elements 112 and 132. The antenna 120 further includes three antenna elements 112, 132, and 134. In the conventional antenna 120, the matching for the feeding circuit 130 may be difficult due to the tolerance between the antenna elements 112, 132, and 134. Therefore, a novel antenna with three or more antenna elements is desired
