I currently have a script that updates my DB to change one field to a timestamp then saves it to a csv. I need to find a way to be able to script this by having the script accept a datetime range from 2014-01-01 to 2014-01-31 for instance and then having it go through each date in that range and find out which rows were updated in between those dates then writing those rows to a CSV. I don't think using a trigger is the correct approach since that would only work on one table. I am also not sure how to find all the rows between dates and I found a related question but it used the nested loop approach which is counter-intuitive to me since it would require using variables that have already been used in the query. A: Declare a single variable to hold the upper bound date: declare @start datetime,@end datetime Then: select * from TableA a join TableB b on a.id = b.id where (a.modified @end) and (b.modified @end) This is a basic logic query; you could add filters to filter the data if you wanted. I can't see a way around a loop, but it would make more sense to create a table variable (@v) and use it instead of table references. For example: declare @start datetime,@end datetime select * into @v from TableA a join TableB b on a.id = b.id where (a.modified @end) and (b.modified

I have a many-to-many relation in my models. The HABTM belongs to routes. It means that each game has many roles and each role has multiple games. When I click on a role name on the index page, the dashboard of the associated games appears. The problem is the following. I have multiple games and I want to get the route of the game from the dashboard. I've tried this: $game->id]) } }>{{ $game->title } } But it returns: How can I get the link of the game on the dashboard? Edit I have defined in the routes.php the following routes: Route::get('/game/{id}', 'GameController@show'); Route::get('/game/{id}/results', 'GameController@results'); Route::get('/game/{id}/dashboard', 'GameController@dashboard'); the return of the second route is the following: The third one is also the same. The second one is just to add a parameter to the first one which the third one doesn't have.
