. this micrografx picture publisher is great program because it also allows you to use itunes to sync the pictures to your iphone so if you're a photographer then this is a must have. you can easily send a snapshot to people if you have a mac. the interface is simple, you can insert pictures, edit them, and resize them. your can also combine your photos to create a slideshow. this is a basic program but definitely a good. (more...) . the software will also turn off your display while the slideshow is running so you do not have to worry about your display going. this allows you to start the slideshow and not have to worry about running out of battery power. . microsoft picture Publisher - microsoft. (more...) . you can import photos from various online sources including flickr, yahoo, geo photo search, and can also upload photos from your own computer. (more...) . Q: C++ library - wrap functionality in new object instance I'm looking for a way to put functionality from a library into a new object type to be used within my code. Right now, the library is simply a sample implementation of something that could be included in a future project. For example, I have an object type Time that needs access to the time in relation to some reference frame. Time is just a dumb container that is specific to this project and the library doesn't have a concept of time measurement. (All it has is a single 'hours' and 'minutes' field.) However, the library does define the class `referenceTime` (Time with a few more fields), which contains methods that I can use to calculate reference time offset. What I want to do is take the `Time` class and wrap all the methods and fields in the `Time` class as attributes of a new `referenceTime` class. Basically, I want to essentially mimic the logic in `referenceTime` inside `Time`. That way, I can run the same method on `Time` with `referenceTime` and the logic will work the same way. Of course, I can't put a `referenceTime` instance inside `Time` (which is a dumb object container), but I can make it an attribute of `Time`. My problem is that I can't figure out how to make `referenceTime` an attribute of `Time`. The easiest thing I can think of is giving `referenceTime` a constructor that takes in `Time` and initializes the `Time` field. The problem with that is that the constructor will d0c515b9f4

[Effect of telemedicine in the postpartum period and neonatal care]. The objective of this study was to evaluate the efficacy of telemedicine as an alternative modality of care delivery for the care of newborns in the immediate postpartum period. This descriptive, observational, cross-sectional study evaluated the samples of mothers at the Emergency Room and the Neonatal Care Unit of a public teaching hospital in the state of Mato Grosso do Sul, Brazil, between March and June 2012. The sample comprised 54 mothers/guardians, 27 of whom used telemedicine to obtain the care service and 27 used conventional care. Results showed that the mothers from the telemedicine group had more significant symptoms after the birth than those from the conventional care group; however, the differences were not statistically significant ($p=0.093$). Mothers of the telemedicine group had higher scores for all indicators of the Apgar scale than mothers of the conventional care group ($p=0.01$). After telemedicine, three babies had a health problem; after conventional care, there were five babies who had health problems. There was a statistically significant difference in the number of failures in the first 90 days after birth ($p=0.03$). Based on this study, it was observed that telemedicine is a potential alternative to conventional care for the care of newborns. Q: Theory behind MySQL adding a join table in between the other two tables I have been wondering for a long time what MySQL do when we add a join table in between two other tables. For example, in my table we have: `SOME_TABLE id | name 1 | a 2 | b JOIN_TABLE id | from_id | to_id 1 | 2 | 2` This `JOIN_TABLE` is being added to the actual table that we have. But I am confused about the storage engine MySQL uses and the reason why it adds this `JOIN_TABLE`. Does anybody knows? Thanks.
