A new method for the isolation of cDNAs encoding rat purinergic receptors: molecular cloning and characterization. In the present paper we describe a new method for the isolation of cDNAs encoding rat purinergic receptors. A new rat strain, WAG, which is not responsive to various purinergic agonists, was identified by testing the ability of several agonists to elicit adenylyate cyclase stimulation in WAG membrane preparations. Using PCR techniques and degenerate oligonucleotide primers with high homology to the rat P2Y(1), P2Y(2) and P2Y(4) receptor subtypes, a rabbit cDNA encoding the rat P2Y(1) receptor was isolated. For the cloning of rat P2Y(2) and P2Y(4) receptor-specific cDNA probes, we designed PCR primers based on the rat P2Y(2) and P2Y(4) receptor sequences obtained from the DNA sequences of the rat cDNA clones. Using these cDNA probes, one recombinant plasmid, rat P2Y(2) receptor cDNA, and two plasmids, rat P2Y(4) receptor cDNA, containing novel cDNAs have been cloned. These cDNAs were expressed in insect cells and their pharmacological properties were characterized. Q: Hausdorff spaces Let XXS be a Hausdorff topological space. Suppose XXS is locally compact. Why it must be compact. A: A locally compact space is Hausdorff, and thus XXS is first countable and completely regular, so is compact iff it is second countable. But the local compactness assumption tells us that XXS is first countable. In order to also conclude that XXS is Hausdorff, note that first countable spaces are SG_deltaS dense, and every compact Hausdorff space is SG_deltaS dense. { "name": "markdown-comment", "description": "Markdown-based comments in JavaScript.", "version": "0.6.1", "homepage": "", "license": "MIT", "keywords": ["mark
