UPDATE 10:51 PM CST - With the Redskins holding a 12-2 record after Week 14 and sitting in first place in the NFC East, owner Daniel Snyder says he wants head coach Jay Gruden to return in 2019. If you somehow have trouble believing that's what a 75-year-old billionaire said, then have I got the quote for you: "When Jay comes back next year [he'll have my support]. I think he's a really good coach." So there we have it. - End of update - 10:11 PM CST - As special teams ace Nigel Bradham and receiver Josh Doctson go through the concussion protocol, it's looking more and more likely that they could miss a game this weekend against the Panthers. We're already hearing chatter that the Redskins could extend Bradford one more time in his career, and seeing how that will impact his status for Week 15 is yet to be seen. 10:01 PM CST - The Packers beat the Lions last week. The Redskins were on Sunday Night Football, and lost. The point here is that we know an ugly win is better than an ugly loss. There's no way to know that for sure as we go on, but history suggests it's a good indicator. I like the Packers to beat the Lions again, even with Bradford potentially coming back. I like the Redskins to win last night against the Eagles and move to 3-8. But I'd bet on the Lions to win this one. And the Redskins to win their other one. - End of update - 10:00 PM CST - The win probability charts on Sports Illustrated are back up, as are the nerdy reasons for it, so we're going to show them to you, along with their new color scheme. 9:56 PM CST - The win probability charts that help us understand and predict the outcomes of the NFL are back. After some mild upgrades and bug fixes, we're ready to help you the way the experts have been helping you for years. Just go here. We're not going to be adding in any new information for real this week. We've been under a lot of pressure lately, so this might be an easier week, all the way around. But if you think it was rough for us last week, don't worry: If the Redskins win, we'll be here. If the Eagles win, we
