The process has been very difficult for me, as it requires a great deal of focus and I have experienced many of the classic symptoms of anxiety and panic attacks. I have found that once the level of attention gets too high I simply have to stop. It's all very difficult. I have read that it's best to practice in a place where you are alone, have as many distractions as possible and practice for a period of 20 minutes or so. This sounds like a good starting point. Any thoughts on this for me would be welcome. Re: Mindfulness/Mindfulness meditation Hi, The essential mindfulness (Santi) practice (what we call Metta) is not taught as a remedial technique, but as a deep living practice that is used to cope with ever-increasing layers of self-entrenched delusion and suffering. It is not a "tool" for coping with such things, but a powerful tool for exploring the depths of the mind itself. Metta is not about being happy or peaceful, it is about becoming free from being identified with the sense of being a "self", and is therefore not meant for those who have had an anxious background and are looking to fix their problems. It may be the most effective therapy for those who live fully present, but we recommend that it only be tried in a qualified centre with the supervision of a senior teacher. The traditional teaching places Metta practices in two groups: (1) Right to left (starting with wholesome or positive states of mind and moving to more dis-easeful states, exploring the territory of conditioning and fixation) and (2) Left to right (starting with more dis
