Electronic Arts Inc. BIOS Little known scandal endangers Ontario Liberal leadership Jacquie Henshaw, The Canadian Press Published Tuesday, March 22, 2016 8:49AM EST Last Updated Tuesday, March 22, 2016 3:49PM EST TORONTO

-- A little-known Conservative party effort to organize a candidate challenge against Liberal Leader Kathleen Wynne failed to materialize before Wynne called a snap election last month, but it could return in the fall. Liberal insiders say the party intends to review its nomination rules as the leadership race comes to its conclusion -- and worry that an attempt to "clean house" of long-tenured MPs could cause problems by creating a host of "distressed" candidates who might not be able to win in the election. They worry the initiative will leave a gaping hole in the party's leadership roster, with only four of its 40

MPs who have been in Ottawa for at least six years eligible to run in the 2018 provincial contest. "We are having a good look at it. I can't say any more about it," said Wynne's campaign co-chair, Patricia Sorbara. "I'm not going to say what we are or are not doing." A new Conservative leader will likely be chosen in late April, and then the party will begin preparations for a provincial election campaign that's expected to be called before the end of the year. A party president's committee will also be elected at the same time, said a senior party official. The regular election rules, which have been in place since 2004, state that MP nominations are triggered by a transfer of support by at least 40 per cent of the vote in the riding. Wynne has only one MP with that level of support among the Liberals' federal caucus, Wayne Easter, while Finance Minister Charles Sousa is the only other MP in the GTA with the necessary level of support to trigger a nomination battle, insiders say. But the four incumbent Liberal MPs have only been in their seats for about five years -- a relatively short amount of time to establish loyalty from their constituents. Sorbara said the Liberal MPs in the party's current ridings have done an "incredible job" to stay in touch with voters. And that has often been difficult for opposition parties,
