The primary issue appears to be the over-allocation of basil and other herbs used in the preparation of the pizza's base. Domino's has revealed that due to an over-allocation of herbs, some customer orders could be served with basil on them. "As a precautionary measure, Domino's Pizza NZ has decided to recall some of its Old England Ham & Pineapple pizzas sold in Auckland, Wellington and Dunedin stores. This product has been sold for a few days only," reads a statement on the company's website. "The product's sell-by date is now dated Tuesday 30 June 2017, and the product's best before date is Tuesday 26 July 2017. Domino's Pizza NZ would like to advise customers not to eat the product if the sell-by or best before date has passed." The pizza has been declared free of any other food safety issues and is continuing to be sold in stores. If a customer is served a pizza with basil on it, they are advised to return it for a full refund or request that it be discarded. "No further recall is planned."Q: How to use the pandas query method with PostgreSQL I would like to use the query method of pandas to run a query on a PostgreSQL database that I have.
